In this madcap journey, a bestselling journalist investigates psychopaths and the industry of doctors, scientists, and everyone else who studies them. The Psychopath Test is a fascinating journey through the minds of madness. Jon Ronson's exploration of a potential hoax being played on the world's top neurologists takes him, unexpectedly, into the heart of the madness industry. An influential psychologist who is convinced that many important CEOs and politicians are, in fact, psychopaths teaches Ronson how to spot these high-flying individuals by looking out for little telltale verbal and nonverbal clues. And so Ronson, armed with his new psychopath-spotting abilities, enters the corridors of power. He spends time with a death-squad leader institutionalized for mortgage fraud in Coxsackie, New York; a legendary CEO whose psychopathy has been speculated about in the press; and a patient in an asylum for the criminally insane who insists he's sane and certainly not a psychopath. Ronson not only solves the mystery of the hoax but also discovers, disturbingly, that sometimes the personalities at the helm of the madness industry are, with their drives and obsessions, as mad in their own way as those they study. And that relatively ordinary people are, more and more, defined by their maddest edges.

This book offers you a uniquely South African love story that has a global trajectory. It traverses the personal, the professional, and the political terrain. Geographically, the protagonists Motho Fela and Kholofelo are strongly rooted in the mining towns of the Witwatersrand and villages of Limpopo. As their relationship and professional lives evolve over decades so expands their world view and their inter-continental, intellectual and activist engagement in global issues, especially on land; the geo-politics around the question of water and the environment. Motho Fela, over the years, becomes the cross-pollinating Afrikologist, modelling the leadership approach that Nxumalo advocates in his capacity as a coach. Nxumalo offers his readers a fable that covers a broad span of topics that will provoke you to reflect on. Identity: Who are you? Where are you coming from? Who are the ancestors that shaped you and walk with you into your future as part of your unseen entourage? Race: Motho Fela's unlearning and new learning, as he first makes judgements of black culture using his white frame of reference and then reconsiders his mistaken assessments. Kholofelo is irritated by the non-compliments she receives that use skin colour descriptors that are food related - chocolate. There's a consistent weave into the story of deep issues sometimes lightly told. One of the strengths of Musa's book is that it is never heavy, preachy or judgmental - the storyline is always there to make you think whilst maintaining the pace of the narrative. Gender. You will eventually meet overt feminist, Nandi Sibiyi, who speaks her truth and puts her fellow delegates on the line. Nandi has the wonderful quality of being strong whilst maintaining her warmth. Musa here once again skilfully weaves in some of his personal leadership lessons. Corruption:

From the descriptions of continuing poverty of mining communities to navigating through tender procedures and observation of malpractice - Musa Nxumalo is unsparing in revealing to readers the sorry-side of South Africa. One moment he describes the ostentatious branded accessories that seem to be part of the outfit of being involved in tenderpreneurship. And then he offers poignancy- when tenderpreneurs are called to account: what does this mean at a very personal domestic level? We witness the pain of a young boy, the friend of Motho Fela's son who's psychologically scarred having witnessed his father's arrest on charges of corruption. Leadership Strategy: The young Motho Fela is instrumental in approaching conflict resolution through inclusivity and collaboration. This is a golden thread throughout the 20-year-time line, culminating in the story of an international education programme for environmental activists and public servants.

Presenting an alternate approach to supply chain management, Lean Supply Chain Management Essentials: A Framework for Materials Managers explains why the traditional materials planning environment, typically embodied by an Enterprise Resource Planning (ERP) system, is an ineffective support system for a company that wants to adopt Lean practices. It begins by defining supply chain management basics, including roles, objectives, and responsibilities from a traditional framework. Next, it describes Lean basics and explores the conflicts between Lean and the traditional framework. The book focuses on the materials management aspects of Lean, such as leveling work into the value stream, heijunka scheduling, standard work, and the concept of intervals, including Every Part Every Interval (EPEI). By combining traditional materials management tools, such as Sales and Operations Planning (S&OP), with Lean manufacturing approaches and applying them to different manufacturing environments, the authors clarify the logic behind why you are doing what you're doing with Lean components and how they fit together as a system. Specifically, they explain how to: Determine which leveling strategy to use to smooth production Calculate interval to determine lot sizes in various production environments Apply Lean to purchasing, warehouse, and logistics areas Use your value stream map for green initiatives and risk management Replace capacity planning and shop floor control with visual factory, operator balance charts, EPEI, and plan for every part Illustrating why balancing demand and capacity is better than trying to balance supply and demand, the book includes a definitive chart that matches Lean tools to the planning and control charts that have served as the model for ERP systems. It integrates the principles learned from Toyota's fifty-plus-year journey with Lean principles to provide the up-to-date understanding required to approach the application of Lean to your supply chain with a methodology that allows for experimentation, learning, and continuous improvement.
