 THE IDEA The idea for Blood Lust came about from my desire to write a Dracula saga with a twist, and so the novel is set during a time of world conflict, which adds emphasis to the already horrific sequence of events that unfold. War, despite its dangers, excitement and heart-rending sights, is a lonely place for most. As an ex-soldier, I have seen many things, some good, some horrific, and I felt that there was a story in me about the fear of death. I can honestly say that I am not afraid of death, although I am afraid of dying and the process leading up to it. In 2005 I saw a picture of a German soldier on the Eastern front, crouching in the snow during a blizzard. His face, although youthful, bore all the signs of impending death, and to this day I see his face and wonder if he ever got home. Therefore, I created the character of Joseph Beck, a German infantryman, and have tried to portray the horrors that he inflicts upon himself. Blood Lust is written through Joseph's eyes, and therefore there is limited dialogue since I wanted the story to be focused more on the thought processes and emotional reactions of this main character. In the book, Joseph encounters vampires who enter the bodies of the dead and feed off them like parasites. However, some vampires mistakenly enter bodies that are not quite dead, and in order for them to survive they must regenerate their host. ABOUT THE BOOK This book is based around two main characters, General Alucard and Joseph Beck. Obsessed with power, Alucard Khan first crossed the Russian border into Europe under the leadership of Genghis Khan in the eleventh century. Today, he is known as General Wolfgang Alucard. He is a vampire and day walker, and has brought with him thousands of vampire parasites to be absorbed into ruthless people, people who will one day form his army in his quest for world domination. Joseph Beck, a German infantryman, and his men are instructed to escort a number of wagons across Russia by the orders of their army commander, General Wolfgang Alucard, to a secret location deep within the interior. Unbeknown to these soldiers, the wagons hide a group of bloodthirsty vampires, and they soon learn that General Alucard has betrayed them. Joseph witnesses the slaughter of his comrades by these vampires, and becomes obsessed with preventing Alucard's mad plan for vampires to populate the world and have complete control. Having been taken over by a mysterious vampire parasite that has transformed him into a human vampire, and driven by anger and remorse over the death of his comrades, Joseph swears he will have his revenge and sets out to find and destroy Alucard. During his long and arduous search, in which he faces great danger, he finds others like him, unaware that Alucard has developed a machine that can incubate the parasites and bring them to maturity much quicker. Joseph realises that there is immediate danger of Alucard fulfilling his mentor's, Adolf Hitler, dreams of world domination, and if he fails to destroy the General and his vampires and loses the battle, humanity will once again tremble under the sound of the Jackboot.

The story of an experiment in genetic engineering which quickly evolves a life of its own. A fast paced story which blurs the line between science and folklore as the unforeseen variables of life assert their own will to survive and refuse to be controlled. Written in the first person from the unique perspective of the main characters, as such, it is narrated differently from different perspectives. One perspective begins to gain control as the other loses control. This dynamic creates an almost biblical twist on the standard relation of creator to created as the struggle for control intertwines in the lives' of the characters.

Cameron and Gillian are an odd boyfriend and girlfriend - he's a vampire and she's a reanimated corpse - and ever since they became living-dead, trouble has followed them around like a bad smell. A good-intentioned trip to see his father coincides with a Satanist serial killer's plan to control the primal force of Death. This, in turn, causes the dead to rise and go on a human flesh-devouring rampage across the city and Cameron is forced to use his powers to save himself, Gillian, his family and ultimately the World. Again. The Carrion is a comedy, schlock horror, gore-fest fusing multiple horror myths and popular cultural references to produce a self-parodying, action-adventure that would appeal to the likes of Pratchett and Rankin fans and horror readers who don't mind their classics getting a wry remix.

His Victims Were Uncounted. . . From the time he was a teenager, Jeremy Bryan Jones had let his violent passions run wild: attacking, raping, and mutilating. Then, in Mobile County, Alabama, Jones's rampage was stopped. But no one knew how many bodies were in his past. His Evil Was Unmeasured. . . Convicted and sentenced to die for the brutal murder of Lisa Nichols, an Alabama mother of two children, Jones shocked authorities with the story of his life--and his claims of snuffing out over a dozen victims in thirteen years. But was he telling the truth, or was he simply taunting his captors? Until The Terrible Truth Emerged. . . Detectives from across the South scrambled to prove Jones's claims. At every turn, the man dubbed "the redneck Ted Bundy" made a mockery of the police, the courts, and the media, and investigations into the horrifying crimes attributed to him still continue. Now, for the first time, the definitive story is told about a psychopath who enjoyed confessing almost as much as he enjoyed killing. . . With 16 Pages of Revealing Photos!

Father and daughter vampire hunters have found themselves unemployed. With time on their hands, they decide to forge their relationship by retreading their nostalgic footsteps in their home city of Paris. Unfortunately, their arrival coincides with a series of mysterious deaths that have something to do with a code, a church and a famous Italian's painting of a do-gooder's final meal. A mix of frenetic action, gratuitous violence and self-disparaging humour - all wrapped up in array of cultural, literary and cinematic references - that puts the 'trite' back into 'poltergeist'. Granada Hills Blood Lust Lulu Press, Inc

Blood addiction in the Valley? In this final book of G. Kent's Granada Hills Blood trilogy, Bach's addiction to human blood intensifies as the Granada Hills Blood War continues to rage throughout the Valley. Though Bach accepts and even revels in the fact that he is a vampire, tragedy and a new enticing blood lust create challenges that cause him to be plagued by "the black dog," a cruel and lingering melancholy that has stalked him for as long as he can remember. Still, he has found his vampire family and feels himself to be a part of something bigger than himself. He really does believe he is one of the good guys, and that there are bad guys who deserve to be routed and eliminated. This gives him a sense of purpose. His life has meaning, even if it's a way different kind of meaning than he ever imagined as a kid growing up in Bakersfield. As the third book opens, it is the Spring of 2007 and Bach, like many humans and vampires, is wondering what the hell to do next.

As Australia comes to grips with accusations that some of its elite soldiers committed war crimes in Afghanistan, a catchcry for certain commentators is that the 'fog of war' explains, justifies and possibly excuses the alleged atrocities that have come to light. The term seeks to capture the uncertainty regarding one's own capability, the adversary's capability, and intent. However, the 'fog of war' is woefully inadequate in explaining actions that were deliberate, targeted and repeated. Abuses of power and the normalisation of deviance are at the heart of the 'cultural issues' that have long plagued the Australian Defence Force. In fact, this can be said of all institutions grappling with the same problems: histories of abuse and secrecy, sexual harassment, and problems of diversity and inclusion. It is always easiest to point a finger at a

'what' rather than a 'who', so 'culture' features prominently in analyses of what went wrong regarding the alleged war crimes committed by Australia's Special Operations Command. But does a focus on culture provide clarity or obscurity? Does it lead to or is it a barrier to accountability? How do you know when you've achieved cultural change?

If you're like most Americans, you'll find yourself slowing down on the highway near the scene of an accident, hoping to catch a glimpse of the mayhem. You probably also secretly enjoy the fistfights that break out at hockey games or hearing about the lurid details revealed during sensational murder trials. And it's no secret that horror fiction, macabre slasher movies, and brutal video games are solid moneymakers. How do we explain the lurid fascination that most people experience when confronted by real or simulated acts of violence, murder, horror, and crime? This is the subject examined by veteran psychologist Jeffrey A. Kottler in this candid assessment of our dark vicarious thrills. Based on a series of interviews with perpetrators, victims, and consumers of violence, including several celebrities, the author of a best-selling book on serial killers explores what there is about this subject that draws such a wide audience. Unlike many other books that attempt to probe the murky psyches of deviant individuals, this book focuses on normal, average people who, despite themselves, enjoy getting close to the most forbidden, perverse side of destruction and evil. The persons interviewed range from homicide detectives and emergency room personnel to a heavyweight boxer and groupies of serial killers on death row. Kottler considers ideas from a variety of theories and research to explain our responses to violence, raises questions about the shifting line between normal and abnormal, evaluates the confusion and ambivalence that many people feel when witnessing others' suffering, and suggests future trends in society's attitudes toward violence. Jeffrey A. Kottler, PhD, is a practicing psychologist, professor of counseling at California State University, Fullerton, and the author of more than seventy-five books, including the New York Times best seller The Last Victim: A True-Life Journey into the Mind of the Serial Killer. He is also head of Empower Nepali Girls, which provides educational scholarships for at-risk, lower-caste girls.
